

Southwest is the quietest quadrant and the most varied — hilltop view property, a walkable village, and deep-woods lots all sit within a few minutes of one another. Grouped here by character rather than alphabetically, because that is how buyers actually choose.

01 Hilltop & View

TOP OF THE MARKET

Southwest Hills

Elevation and winding streets, with downtown and Cascade outlooks.

Portland Heights

Historic homes on established streets minutes above the city center.

Council Crest

Portland's highest point at 1,071 feet; panoramic mountain views.

Healy Heights

Small and elevated, among the highest-priced addresses in Southwest.

Arlington Heights

Beside Washington Park, with substantial homes and a city outlook.

02 Village & Walkable

MAIN STREET ON FOOT

Multnomah Village

Independent shops, cafés and galleries on cosy winding streets.

Hillsdale

Compact town center and farmers market, quick run to downtown.

Burlingame

Established streets of 1920s–60s homes with easy Barbur access.

South Burlingame

Curving roads and mid-century housing stock close to I-5.

03 Wooded Residential

TREES AND LARGER LOTS

Bridlemile

Forested lots with valley and Coast Range views.

Maplewood

Cottage-scale homes and a strong neighborhood identity.

Marshall Park

Quiet and woodsy around a 25-acre park with trails.

Collins View

Wraps Lewis & Clark College, forest on three sides.

Arnold Creek

Bordering Tryon Creek State Natural Area, north of Lake Oswego.

Ash Creek

Built around its own natural area near Tryon Creek.

Crestwood

Between SW 45th and Barbur, with Woods Memorial Natural Area.

Hayhurst

Early-1900s through 1960s homes near Gabriel Park.

West Portland Park

Forest-edged and largely 1940s–80s, near PCC Sylvania.

Markham

Wooded and quiet along the I-5 corridor, limited retail.

Far Southwest

Bordering Tigard and Lake Oswego, with Lesser Park nearby.

04 Close-In & Urban

DOWNTOWN AND OHSU

Goose Hollow

Among the densest parts of the city, Providence Park at the door.

Homestead

OHSU on the hill above, a short walk to downtown.

South Portland

Formerly Corbett–Terwilliger–Lair Hill; riverfront and OHSU.

Johns Landing

Willamette frontage with trails, dining and tram access.

South Waterfront

High-rise living and the aerial tram; the newest housing in Southwest.

BOUNDARIES THAT CATCH PEOPLE OUT

- Raleigh Hills, Garden Home and West Slope are marketed as Southwest but sit in unincorporated Washington County — different taxing districts and different school assignments.
- Sylvan-Highlands is usually classified Northwest, despite sitting just across Highway 26 from Southwest addresses.
- Multnomah is the neighborhood; Multnomah Village is the commercial strip at its heart. Listings use both.
- South Portland is the current name for what older listings still call Corbett—Terwilliger—Lair Hill.

WHAT ACTUALLY SEPARATES THEM

- Elevation. The hills carry a view premium and a steeper commute; the flats trade lower and drive easier in winter.
- Housing stock. Southwest runs from 1900s cottages through mid-century ranches to new high-rise — often within a mile.
- Tree cover. Much of Southwest is genuinely wooded, which affects light, lot maintenance and what a survey turns up.
- Assessed value. Oregon's does not reset on sale, so tax bills differ between near-identical neighbors. Always check the county figure.

01

START WITH ELEVATION

Hill or flat decides view, price and winter driving in one answer, and narrows twenty-five options to a handful.

02

THEN THE COMMUTE

Downtown, OHSU and the westside suburbs pull in three different directions from Southwest.

03

THEN THE HOUSE

Housing stock varies more by pocket than by price tier. Tour two contrasting areas before deciding.

WHERE TO START LOOKING

If you are new to Southwest, walk Multnomah Village and drive Council Crest on the same afternoon. They are ten minutes apart and sit at opposite ends of what this quadrant offers — most buyers know which way they lean by the end of it.
